1. Employment agencies were eliminated in the fall of 1950. Workers are assigned by the ministry in charge of the particular industry with which the workers are connected. Firms turn in monthly estimates of their manpower needs and are assigned employees from the pools at the disposal of the different ministries.
2. The Engineers' and Technicians' Union no longer exists. Engineers and technicians must belong to the union of their specialized trades; for example, textile workers belong to the Union of Textile and Clothing Workers and pay dues amounting to 0.5 per cent of their salaries.
